KAYE CHRISTIAN,

Case No. 1:14-CV-00010

Plaintiff,

v.

DECISION AND ORDER

COMMONWEALTH OF THE NORTHERN MARIANA ISLANDS,
COMMONWEALTH HEALTHCARE
CORP., EUSEBIO MANGLONA, DR.
FRANCOIS CLAASSENS, ESTHER L.
MUNA, JAMES C. DELEON
GUERRERO, and DOES 1–10,

Defendants.

I. INTRODUCTION

In her First Amended Complaint, Plaintiff Kaye Christian seeks injunctive and monetary relief against the Defendants<sup>1</sup> for allegedly taking her from her home and holding her captive for approximately four days in Commonwealth hospitals. (ECF No. 10.) The Defendants ask the Court to dismiss most of the Complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b). (See Claassens’ Mot. to Dismiss, ECF No. 13; Commonwealth, CHC, and all other “official capacity” defendants’ Mot. to Dismiss, ECF No. 14; Eusebio Manglona’s Mot. to Dismiss, ECF No. 15.)

<sup>1</sup> The Defendants are: the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands (“Commonwealth” or “CNMI”); Commonwealth Healthcare Corporation (“CHC”); Dr. Francois Claassens, a physician employed by CHC or the Commonwealth; Eusebio Manglona, a police officer with the Department of Public Safety (“DPS”); Esther L. Muna, the CEO of CHC; James C. Deleon Guerrero, the Commissioner of DPS; and Does 1-10, employees of the Commonwealth, CHC, or DPS. (Compl. ¶¶ 6–13.)

1 The Court heard arguments on October 2, 2014, and requested further briefing from both parties.
2 (See Min. Entry, Oct. 2, 2014, ECF No. 24.) Having now received the supplemental briefs, and 3 having considered the arguments presented by the parties in all the materials filed, as well as during 4 the hearing, the Court will grant the Defendants' motions in part and deny them in part. The Court
5 will dismiss the following causes of action without prejudice: Count 1 to the extent it raises a claim
6 of excessive force; Count 2; Count 3 for the claim based on physical restraint; Counts 4 through 7 6; Counts 9 through 11; Count 12 as it pertains to Claassens; and Count 13. Claassens will be 8 dismissed with prejudice from Count 7. Manglona, Claassens, and Does 1–10 will be dismissed in 9 their individual capacities from Count 8 with prejudice. To the extent that Count 8 asserts claims 10 under Article I, section 5 of the Commonwealth Constitution, the Court will dismiss it with 11 prejudice. The surviving claims will be: Count 1 for false arrest; Count 3 for chemical restraint;
12 Count 7 against the Commonwealth and CHC; Count 8 against the Commonwealth, CHC, and 13 Manglona, Claassens, and Does 1–10 in their official capacities; and Count 12 against the 14 Commonwealth, CHC, and Does 1–10. The Court will grant leave for Christian to amend any 15 claim dismissed without prejudice, consistent with this order.
16

17 Defendants also move the Court to order Christian to provide a more definite statement.
18 (ECF No. 15.) The Court will grant the motion and order Christian to amend the pleadings.
19

20 II. FACTS

21 At this pre-answer stage of the litigation, the Court assumes the truth of Christian's
22 allegations as retold in this section, sans legal conclusions. See Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 23 550 U.S. 544, 555–56 (2007).

24 a. Involuntary Commitment, 2011

25 Days before Christmas in 2011, Kaye Christian, who suffers from a mental illness, was 26

1 involuntarily committed at the Rota Health Center. (Compl. ¶¶ 5, 16, 51.) During the three days
2 she spent in custody, Christian was handcuffed and left alone for hours at a time without bathroom
3 privileges. (Id. ¶ 51.) Her mistreatment led to a lawsuit, and then a settlement agreement, which 4 she attached as Exhibit A to the Complaint.<sup>2</sup> (Id. ¶ 53.)

5       The agreement contained six terms, mostly prospective in nature, aimed at alleviating
6 Christian’s “concern[] that neither she nor anyone else is ever again [mis]treated” at the Rota
7 Health Center. (Settlement Agreement, Recital F, ECF No. 10-1.) Under those terms, the 8 Commonwealth and CHC were required to “ensure that all employees and agents of the Rota 9 Health Center and the Rota Department of Public Safety” receive compliance training with the 10 Commonwealth’s Involuntary Civil Commitment Act and Patient’s Rights Act. (Id. § 2, ¶ 1.) The 11 Commonwealth and CHC also agreed to ongoing training for all employees “who have direct 12 patient contact” in the safe use of seclusion and non-violent restraint, as well as conflict
13 management. (Id. ¶ 2.) Physical and chemical restraints were not to be used unless necessitated by 14 emergency, and in no event would handcuffs be used on mentally ill patients; instead, Rota Health
15 Center would “procure and implement the use of humane restraints” within 60 days of the 16 agreement. (Id. ¶¶ 3–4.) Finally, a patient would have the right to “formulate advance directives”
17 that would bind “hospital staff and practitioners” at Rota Health Center, including the right to have 18 a person of his choosing promptly notified of his admission to the hospital. (Id. ¶¶ 5–6.)

19
20
21       The settlement agreement was signed in December 2012 and January 2013. (Id. ¶ 7.) A 22 year later, Christian was given the opportunity to observe its effects.

23                   b. Involuntary Commitment, 2013–2014

25
26 <sup>2</sup> The Court can consider the attached agreement for purposes of the Defendants’ motions to dismiss. See Marder v. Lopez, 450 F.3d 445, 448 (9th Cir. 2006).

1 Early in the afternoon on New Year's Eve 2013, police officers, including Defendant
 2 Officer Eusebio Manglona, called on Kaye Christian at her Rota home to "talk." (Compl. ¶¶ 10,
 3 15.) Christian agreed, but not before barricading the stairs to her home with a table. (Id. ¶¶ 17–18.)
 4 It did no good; explaining that "the doctor" ordered that Christian be taken in, Manglona went up
 5 the stairs, pushed aside the table, grabbed Christian's arm, twisted it up behind her, and carried her 6 down the stairs. (Id. ¶¶ 19–25.) When Christian demanded to see papers or a medical referral, the 7 officers stated that they did not have any. (Id. ¶¶ 21–22.) They then handcuffed Christian to a
 8 stretcher and transported her to the Rota Health Center. (Id. ¶¶ 25, 28.) Her protests fell on deaf
 9 ears. (Id. ¶ 29.)

11 After reaching the clinic, the officers handcuffed Christian to a bed. (Id. ¶ 30.) No one 12 explained her rights or the reason for her detention and she was not allowed to make a phone call.
 13 (Id. ¶ 40–41, 49.) Dr. Claassens appeared and ordered Manglona and Does 1–10 to restrain 14 Christian while he administered three successive injections. (Id. ¶¶ 31–36.) The drugs took effect;
 15 Christian fell into unconsciousness. (Id. ¶ 37.)

16 The next day, Claassens and Does 1–10 flew Christian from Rota to the psychiatric ward
 17 at CHC on Saipan. (Id. ¶ 44.) No one explained what Christian's rights were or allowed her to 18 make a phone call. (Id. ¶¶ 46–47, 50.) For two more days, she was forbidden from using her cell
 19 phone, computer, backpack, or personal clothes. (Id. ¶¶ 48, 45.) Then, on January 3, 2014, CHC
 20 released her. (Id. ¶ 45.)

22 III. CLAIMS

23 Christian asserts 13 causes of action, each against multiple defendants in official and 24 individual capacities, for relief ranging from declaratory and injunctive relief to compensatory and 25 punitive damages. The first six counts are based on federal law, and Counts 7–13 are based on 26

Commonwealth law (“state law”). The chart below summarizes the counts, states which defendants are alleged liable in which capacities, and lists the relief sought.

Cause of Action	Defendants	Relief Sought
1. Unreasonable seizure in violation of the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments: 42 U.S.C. § 1983	Manglona (both capacities) Claassens (both capacities) Does 1–10 (both capacities)	Damages (Compensatory and Punitive) Declaratory Judgment
2. Deprivation of a liberty interest created by CNMI’s Involuntary Civil Commitment Act in violation of Fourteenth Amendment due process: 42 U.S.C. § 1983	Manglona (both capacities) Claassens (both capacities) Does 1–10 (both capacities)	Damages (Compensatory and Punitive) Declaratory Judgment
3. Deprivation of a liberty interest in freedom from physical and chemical restraint created by CNMI’s Patient’s Rights Act in violation of Fourteenth Amendment due process: 42 U.S.C. § 1983	Manglona (both capacities) Claassens (both capacities) Does 1–10 (both capacities)	Damages (Compensatory and Punitive) Declaratory Judgment
4. Deprivation of a liberty interest in access to a telephone created by CNMI’s Patient’s Rights Act in violation of Fourteenth Amendment due process and the First Amendment: 42 U.S.C. § 1983	Claassens (both capacities) Does 1–10 (both capacities)	Damages (Compensatory and Punitive) Declaratory Judgment
5: Deprivation of liberty in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment based on a failure to train: 42 U.S.C. § 1983	Esther L. Muna (official capacity) James C. Deleon Guerrero (official capacity)	Injunctive Relief Declaratory Judgment
6. Unlawful discrimination in violation of the Americans with Disabilities Act: 42 U.S.C. § 12132: 42 U.S.C. § 1983	Commonwealth CHC Muna (official capacity) Deleon Guererro (official capacity) Manglona (both capacities) Claassens (both capacities)	Declaratory Judgment Damages (Manglona and Claassens only)
7. Breach of Settlement Agreement	Commonwealth CHC Claassens	Damages Injunctive Relief
8. Unreasonable seizure in violation of Article I, §§ 3 & 5 of the Commonwealth Constitution	Commonwealth CHC Manglona (both capacities) Claassens (both capacities) Does 1–10 (both capacities)	Damages (Compensatory and Punitive) Declaratory Judgment
9. Deprivation of liberty interest created by CNMI’s Involuntary Civil Commitment Act without due process in violation of Article I, § 5 of the Commonwealth Constitution	Commonwealth CHC Manglona (both capacities) Claassens (both capacities) Does 1–10 (both capacities)	Damages (Compensatory and Punitive) Declaratory Judgment

13. Negligence	Unspecified Defendants	Unspecified

The Defendants argue that the Court lacks jurisdiction over the Commonwealth, CHC, and the official-capacity Defendants based on sovereign immunity. They also argue that several counts should be dismissed for failure to state a claim. Finally, the Defendants ask the Court to order Christian to provide a more definite statement of her claims. The Court will address the arguments in turn.

IV. JURISDICTION

a. Introduction

Defendants argue that this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the Commonwealth, CHC, and defendants named in their official capacities (collectively, the “official capacity Defendants”) because the Commonwealth enjoys sovereign immunity.<sup>3</sup> (Def. Suppl. Br. 1–9, ECF No. 25.) However, in Fleming v. Department of Public Safety, the Court of Appeals for the Ninth

<sup>3</sup> The parties do not dispute that the Court has statutory subject matter jurisdiction over each of the counts in the Complaint based on its federal question and supplemental jurisdiction. See 28 U.S.C. §§ 1332, 1367. Rather, the Commonwealth's asserted sovereign immunity would displace that jurisdiction. See Pennhurst State Sch. & Hosp. v. Halderman, 465 U.S. 89, 122–23 (1984) (noting that the general principles of judicial economy in favor of pendant jurisdiction over state law claims cannot overcome sovereign immunity).

1 Circuit held that the Commonwealth waived sovereign immunity to suits filed in federal court
2 based on federal law when it entered into the Covenant to Establish a Commonwealth of the 3 Northern Mariana Islands in Political Union with the United States of America (“Covenant”).
4 837 F.2d 401, 405, 407 (9th Cir. 1988). Defendants propose two reasons for the Court to avoid a
5 similar holding in this case. First, they argue that Fleming does not apply to Counts 7–13 (the state
6 law counts) because its holding was limited to suits filed in federal court based on federal law, not 7 state law. (Def. Suppl. Br. 4–5.) Alternatively, Defendants argue that Fleming has been 8 substantially undermined by subsequent Supreme Court decisions, and urge the Court to find that 9 it is no longer good law. (Id. 5–6.)
10

11 Having considered Defendants’ arguments and conducted its own review of the relevant 12 caselaw, the Court agrees that there are reasons to doubt the viability of Fleming’s rationale and 13 holding. Nevertheless, that decision remains binding and this Court will faithfully apply it.
14 Following the logic of Fleming, the Court finds that the Commonwealth waived its immunity to 15 all suits in federal court, whether based on federal or state law. The Court will therefore assert
16 jurisdiction over all of Christian’s claims as if the official-capacity defendants enjoyed no
17 sovereign immunity to the federal venue whatsoever.
18

19 b. Analysis

20 The question presented is whether the Commonwealth enjoys sovereign immunity over 21 claims based on state law brought in federal court. Under ordinary principles of sovereign
22 immunity, the answer would be yes. Pennhurst, 465 U.S. at 106 (“[I]t is difficult to think of a
23 greater intrusion on state sovereignty than when a federal court instructs state officials on how to 24 conform their conduct to state law.”). However, Fleming forces a different conclusion.

25 Sovereign immunity prevents a federal court from exercising Article III jurisdiction over a 26

1 state. In re New York, 256 U.S. 490, 497 (1921) (“the entire judicial power granted by the
 2 Constitution does not embrace authority to entertain a suit brought by private parties against a state
 3 without consent given”); see U.S. Const. amend. XI (“The Judicial power of the United States shall 4 not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of 5 the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.”).
 6 The doctrine also prevents states from being sued in any court on the basis of federal law, with 7 limited exceptions. Alden v. Maine, 527 U.S. 706, 712 (1999) (stating that a provision of the FLSA
 8 purporting to authorize private actions against states in state courts was invalid because Congress
 9 lacks Article I authority to subject a state to private suits for damages in state courts); cf. United 10 States v. Georgia, 546 U.S. 151, 158 (2006) (finding that Title II of the Americans with Disabilities
 11 Act (“ADA”) validly abrogates states’ sovereign immunity pursuant to section 5 of the Fourteenth 12 Amendment). A state’s agencies and employees sued in official capacities are protected in the 13 same way as the state itself. See Florida Dep’t of Health and Rehabilitative Servs. v. Florida
 14 Nursing Home Ass’n, 450 U.S. 147, 150 (1981); Cory v. White, 457 U.S. 85, 91 (1982).

16 With the exception of the Commonwealth, every United States territory with a federal court
 17 enjoys sovereign immunity, and has throughout this nation’s history. See Kawanakoa v.
 18 Polyblank, 205 U.S. 349, 353–54 (1907) (finding that then-territory Hawaii enjoyed sovereign 19 immunity); Porto Rico v. Rosaly, 227 U.S. 270, 274 (1913) (“It may be justly asserted that Porto 20 Rico is a completely organized territory, although not a territory incorporated into the United 21 States, and that there is no reason why Porto Rico should not be held to be such a territory” for 22 purposes of sovereign immunity) (quoting New York ex re. Kopel v. Bingham, 221 U.S. 468, 476
 23 (1909)); Harris v. Boreham, 233 F.2d 110, 114 (3d Cir. 1956) (Virgin Islands); Richardson v.
 24 Knud Hansen Mem’l Hosp., 744 F.2d 1007, 1010 (3d Cir. 1984) (same); Crain v. Guam, 195 F.2d

1 414, 416–17 (9th Cir. 1952) (Guam); Marx v. Government of Guam, 866 F.2d 294, 297–99 (9th
2 Cir. 1989) (same).

3 A state may waive its immunity to suit in federal court, but to do so, the waiver must be 4 unequivocally expressed, or “stated by the most express language or by such overwhelming
5 implications from the text as will leave no room for any other reasonable construction.” Edelman
6 v. Jordan, 415 U.S. 651, 673 (1974) (internal quotation marks omitted); see Pennhurst, 465 U.S.
7 at 99. The state controls the scope of the waiver, and may waive generally by statute, or specifically
8 on a case-by-case basis. See Lapides v. Board of Regents, 535 U.S. 613, 616 (2002) (holding that 9 a state waives its sovereign immunity when it removes a case from state to federal court).
10

11 In Fleming, the Ninth Circuit addressed two distinct but related questions: (1) whether the 12 Commonwealth was a “person” for purposes of 42 U.S.C. § 1983,<sup>4</sup> and (2) whether the 13 Commonwealth enjoyed sovereign immunity. 837 F.2d at 404–8. Relying on earlier Ninth Circuit
14 caselaw, Fleming held that the Commonwealth was a “person” for purposes of section 1983. Id. at 15 406. Therefore, a plaintiff could sue the Commonwealth unless sovereign immunity presented a 16 jurisdictional bar. See id. at 407 (“We note that were states not persons under [section 1983], the 17 issue of eleventh amendment immunity would not arise . . . [and] the section would simply be 18 inapplicable to the states by its terms.”).<sup>5</sup>
19

20 To determine whether the Commonwealth enjoyed sovereign immunity, Fleming looked 21

22 <sup>4</sup> Section 1983 creates a federal civil cause of action for violations of constitutional and federal rights by state actors:

23 Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State
24 or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress. . . .

25 42 U.S.C. § 1983.

26 <sup>5</sup> Fleming’s holding that the Commonwealth is a “person” under section 1983 is no longer good law. See DeNieva v. Reyes, 966 F.2d 480, 483 (9th Cir. 1992).

1 to the Covenant. Id. at 405. In section 501(a), the Covenant expressly incorporates certain 2 provisions of the U.S. Constitution:

3 To the extent that they are not applicable of their own force, the following
 4 provisions of the Constitution of the United States will be applicable within 5 the Northern Mariana Islands as if the Northern Mariana Islands were one of 6 the several States: Article I, Section 9, Clauses 2, 3, and 8; Article I, Section
 7 10, Clauses 1 and 3; Article IV, Section 1 and Section 2, Clauses 1 and 2;
 8 Amendments 1 through 9, inclusive; Amendment 13; Amendment 14,
 9 Section 1; Amendment 15; Amendment 19; and Amendment 26; provided,
 10 however, that neither trial by jury nor indictment by grand jury shall be 11 required in any civil action or criminal prosecution based on local law, except 12 where required by local law. Other provisions of or amendments to the 13 Constitution of the United States, which do not apply of their own force
 14 within the Northern Mariana Islands, will be applicable within the Northern 15 Mariana Islands only with approval of the Government of the Northern 16 Mariana Islands and of the Government of the United States.

17 Fleming found that the meticulousness displayed by the Covenant drafters in incorporating some—18 but not all—constitutional provisions meant that any omissions must have been deliberate. Id. at 19 405. The Eleventh Amendment is not expressly included in section 501(a). Accordingly, Fleming
 20 found that the absence of the Eleventh Amendment was deliberate. Id. The Court next held that by 21 deliberately leaving the Eleventh Amendment out of the Covenant, the drafters unequivocally
 22 intended to waive Eleventh Amendment immunity. Id. (quoting Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 U.S. (2 23 Dall.) 419, 454 (1793) (opinion of Wilson, J.)).

24 Fleming then considered whether the Commonwealth enjoyed any residual common law
 25 immunity apart from the Eleventh Amendment, but held that the Covenant impliedly waived all 26 immunity to suits in federal court based on federal law. 837 F.2d at 407. It noted that there is “no meaningful distinction between eleventh amendment immunity and common law sovereign immunity,” and reiterated its finding that the absence of the Eleventh Amendment from section 501(a) of the Covenant represented the drafters’ “intent[ion] to forego any sovereign immunity from suit in federal court that the Commonwealth might otherwise enjoy.” Id. (emphasis added).

1 In support of its finding that the Covenant waived the Commonwealth's sovereign
 2 immunity to suits based on federal law and filed in federal court, Fleming referred to the 3 "authoritative" Section by Section Analysis of the Covenant to Establish a Commonwealth of the 4 Northern Mariana Islands (the "Analysis") by the Marianas Political Status Commission. Id. at 5 408. In its discussion of section 103 of the Covenant—which substantially guarantees the 6 Commonwealth the right of self-governance—the Analysis provides that "the Government of the 7 Northern Mariana Islands will have sovereign immunity, so that it cannot be sued on the basis of 8 its own laws without its consent." Analysis 11 (1975). Fleming found that by negative inference,
 9 the Analysis of section 103 waived any sovereign immunity to federal suits in federal court by 10 adopting state law immunity. 837 F.2d at 408.

12 c. Arguments

13 Defendants make two principal arguments for not applying Fleming to this case and finding 14 that the Commonwealth enjoys sovereign immunity from suits in federal court based on state law.
 15 First, Defendants contend that Fleming should be limited to its holding that the Commonwealth
 16 waived immunity only with respect to suits based on federal law filed in federal court. (Def. Suppl.
 17 Br. 4–5.) Second, Defendants assert that Fleming has been significantly undermined by subsequent 18 caselaw, and that this Court should therefore decline to apply it at all. (Id. 5–6.) The Court also 19 notes several problems with the rationale of the decision, which suggest that it overlooked critical 20 sections of the Covenant and relevant caselaw. However, because neither the Supreme Court nor 21 an en banc panel of the Ninth Circuit has directly undermined Fleming's holding—despite 22 concerns raised more recently by a different panel—this Court will stay true to Fleming as binding
 23 precedent and reject Defendants' contentions. See Hart v. Massanari, 266 F.2d 1155, 1170 (9th 24 Cir. 2001) ("Binding authority must be followed unless and until overruled by a body competent 25

1 to do so.”). The Court will address the arguments in turn.

2 Defendants first argue that Fleming’s limited holding and reliance on the Analysis suggests
3 that the Commonwealth enjoys immunity to suits in federal court based on state law. (Def. Suppl.
4 Br. 4–5.) Fleming “conclud[ed] that in entering into the Covenant the Commonwealth impliedly
5 waived whatever immunity it might otherwise have enjoyed against suits in federal court arising
6 under federal law.” 837 F.2d at 407 (emphasis added). Additionally, quoting the Analysis, Fleming
7 argued that the Commonwealth “cannot be sued on the basis of its own laws without its consent”
8 to support its conclusion that “the Commonwealth does not retain sovereign immunity from federal 9 suits.” Id. at 408. Defendants contend that it would be inconsistent for the Commonwealth’s 10 immunity to depend on venue, i.e., that it could be sued on the basis of its own laws in federal 11 court, but not state court. (Def. Suppl. Br. 5.) To resolve that purported conflict, Defendants 12 suggest that Fleming must have intended to exempt the Commonwealth from state claims in 13 federal court. (Id.) The Court does not share Defendants’ interpretation.

15 More likely, Fleming reiterated the commonsense notion that the Commonwealth can 16 determine the scope of its own liability as a matter of state law. That way, whether the 17 Commonwealth were sued in state court applying its own law, or in a federal court applying state
18 law, the Commonwealth’s liability would not change. In other words, the Court does not interpret 19 Fleming as expressing a departure from ordinary Erie doctrine principles. See Erie R. Co. v.
20 Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 78 (1938) (“Except in matters governed by the Federal Constitution or by 21 acts of Congress, the law to be applied in any case is the law of the state.”).

23 If this Court were to adopt Defendants’ interpretation, it would have to ignore Fleming’s 24 finding that “where the drafters of the Covenant rejected the protections of the Eleventh 25 Amendment, they must have also intended to forego any sovereign immunity from suit in federal 26

1 court that the Commonwealth might otherwise enjoy.” 837 F.2d at 407 (emphasis added). Indeed,
2 if the drafters of the Covenant intended to waive only the Commonwealth’s immunity to lawsuits
3 based on federal law—but not its immunity to suits filed in federal court—then doing so by 4 excluding the Eleventh Amendment would have made no sense, because reference to the Eleventh
5 Amendment encompasses both sorts of immunity. Cf. Alden, 527 U.S. at 713 (stating that court
6 references to “Eleventh Amendment immunity” are “convenient shorthand but something of a 7 misnomer” because sovereign immunity “neither derives from, nor is limited by, the terms of the 8 Eleventh Amendment”). Defendants’ contrary interpretation would make the drafters’ decision
9 completely illogical, an unacceptable supposition.
10

11 Defendants next argue that Fleming has been significantly undermined by subsequent 12 Supreme Court cases, and thus that this Court should recognize Fleming’s abrogation and apply
13 the sovereign immunity analysis that any other jurisdiction would enjoy. (Def. Suppl. Br. 5–6.)
14 For instance, in Virginia Office for Protection & Advocacy v. Stewart, the Supreme Court stated 15 that the Eleventh Amendment “only eliminates the basis for our judgment in the famous case of 16 Chisholm v. Georgia [1793], which involved a suit against a State by a noncitizen of the State,”
17 but that sovereign immunity preexisted the Constitution and was not altered by Article III’s
18 jurisdictional grant to federal courts. 131 S. Ct. 1632, 1637–38 (2011) (internal citations omitted).
19 Defendants contend that, by looking only at whether the Eleventh Amendment appeared in the 20 Covenant, Fleming failed to consider preexisting immunity. (Def. Suppl. Br. 5–6.)
21

22 However, Defendants’ argument was rejected—not unsympathetically—in Norita v.
23 Northern Mariana Islands. 331 F.3d 690, 696–97 (9th Cir. 2003). In that case, the Ninth Circuit
24 found that Fleming had not been abrogated by recent Supreme Court cases describing sovereign
25 immunity as preexisting the Eleventh Amendment because that interpretation long predated
26

Fleming. Id. at 696 (citing Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U.S. 1, 12–13 (1890)). As a general rule, Norita stated that an appellate panel may not overrule another panel absent intervening Supreme Court precedent. 331 F.3d at 696. Because the interpretation of the Eleventh Amendment that the Commonwealth asserted as abrogating Fleming actually predated that case, it could not have been an intervening factor in abrogating the decision, and the Court found itself bound by the earlier panel’s holding. Id. at 696–97. To the extent that Fleming failed to consider whether the drafters of the Covenant left the Eleventh Amendment out of section 501(a) because they relied on the preexisting common law immunity, rather than the convenient shorthand of the Eleventh Amendment, Fleming erred in the first instance, and no amount of further clarification from the Supreme Court can impliedly abrogate the decision any further. Because this matter presents the same situation as Norita, the Court must again follow precedent and reject Defendants’ argument. Id.<sup>6</sup>

Of course, as Defendants argue, Fleming may have been wrongly decided. As a matter of statutory construction, it is unclear why Fleming demanded that the Eleventh Amendment appear in section 501(a) of the Covenant. That section—which bears a striking resemblance to the 1968 civil rights provisions of Guam’s Organic Act<sup>7</sup>—codifies nearly every individual right guaranteed by the Constitution, as well as some substantive limitations on the authority of the Commonwealth,

<sup>6</sup> In Norita, the Commonwealth prevailed on the merits and did not seek en banc review of Fleming’s sovereign immunity ruling. 331 F.3d at 697–99; see Puerto Rico Aqueduct & Sewer Auth. v. Metcalf & Eddy, Inc., 506 U.S. 139, 141 (1993) (holding that a district court order denying a state or state entity sovereign immunity from suit in federal court may be directly appealed under the collateral order doctrine).

The following provisions of and amendments to the Constitution of the United States are hereby extended to Guam to the extent that they have not been previously extended to that territory and shall have the same force and effect there as in the United States or in any State of the United States: article I, section 9, clauses 2 and 3; article IV, section 1 and section 2, clause 1; the first to ninth amendments inclusive; the thirteenth amendment; the second sentence of section 1 of the fourteenth amendment; and the fifteenth and nineteenth amendments.

such as printing its own money or going to war. Covenant § 501(a); see U.S. Const. art. I, § 9, cls. 2 (habeas corpus), 3 (federal bills of attainder and ex post facto laws), 8 (titles or gifts of nobility); § 10, cls. 1 (state treaties, money, bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, or impairment of contracts), 3 (state wars); art. IV, §§ 1 (full faith and credit), 2, cls. 1 (privileges and immunities), 2 (delivery of fugitives); amends. 1 (free speech, religion, assembly), 2 (bear arms), 3 (quarter soldiers), 4 (unreasonable searches and seizures), 5 (compelled testimony, double jeopardy, due process), 6 (speedy public trial, jury trial, confrontation, assistance of counsel), 7 (civil jury trial), 8 (excessive bail, cruel and unusual punishment), 9 (unenumerated rights retained), 13 (abolition of slavery), 14, § 1 (privileges or immunities, due process, equal protection), 15 (vote), 19 (women’s suffrage), 26 (suffrage at age 18). Constitutional provisions that neither secure an individual right nor limit the power of the states—such as the Eleventh Amendment—are simply not present in section 501(a). Neither are other constitutional provisions, such as Article II. However, it would be ludicrous to argue that the Covenant rejected the federal executive branch, despite its absence from section 501(a). In sum, the Eleventh Amendment’s absence from section 501(a) has no bearing on the intentions of the drafters with respect to sovereign immunity. See Analysis 39 (“The purpose of [section 501] is to extend to the people of the Northern Marianas the basic rights of United States citizenship.”).

The Covenant does not specifically provide for the Commonwealth’s sovereign immunity. Instead, like the Constitution, the Covenant creates a limited federal judicial power with sovereign immunity implied: “The District Court for the Northern Mariana Islands will have the jurisdiction of a district court of the United States.” Covenant § 402(a); see § 401 (placing this Court under the Ninth Circuit). Because United States district courts lack jurisdiction over private claims against states and territories, section 402(a) presumably mandates the same deficiency for this Court’s jurisdiction over private actions against the Commonwealth. Cf. Covenant § 403(b) (stating that Title 28 of the United States Code—which includes jurisdictional grants for federal question, diversity, and supplemental cases—applies to the Commonwealth to the same extent it applies to Guam). Fleming failed to address whether section 402(a), by creating a federal court of identical jurisdiction to any other federal court, meant what it said. That omission was almost certainly determinative. See 837 F.2d at 407 (stating that if the drafters of the Covenant did not “intend[] to forgo any sovereign immunity from suit,” then “their decision to exclude the eleventh amendment would make little sense and have been of no practical effect”).

Without overlooking section 402(a), Fleming could not have satisfied the requirement that any waiver of sovereign immunity be “unequivocally expressed.” Pennhurst, 465 U.S. at 99; see Addington v. Texas, 441 U.S. 418, 432 (1979) (“The term ‘unequivocal,’ taken by itself, means proof that admits of no doubt.”). Section 402(a) provides another “reasonable construction” of the Covenant and nicely harmonizes the absence of Article III and the Eleventh Amendment in section 501(a) with the establishment of the judicial power in Article IV. See Edelman, 415 U.S. at 673.

Even if the Covenant were silent on the issue of immunity, the Commonwealth Constitution and statutes indicate that the Commonwealth did not intend to waive immunity to suit in federal court. See CNMI Const. Art. I, § 3(c) (“A person adversely affected by an illegal search or seizure has a cause of action against the government within limits provided by law”); 3 CMC §§ 2202, 2251 (partially waiving immunity to claims created by state law but providing that the Commonwealth courts would have exclusive original jurisdiction).<sup>8</sup> In Atascadero State Hospital

<sup>8</sup> To the extent that Defendants argue that the Commonwealth Constitution or statutes provide independent bases for finding sovereign immunity, the Court rejects the argument based on Fleming. The Covenant is the supreme law of the Commonwealth, and Fleming determined that it waived sovereign immunity. Accordingly, the Commonwealth’s Constitution or statutes cannot depart from the Covenant and create sovereign immunity. See Covenant § 102 (Covenant supremacy).

1 v. Scanlon, the Supreme Court held that Article III, section 5 of the California Constitution—which 2 provided that “suits may be brought against the State in such manner and in such courts as shall 3 be directed by law”—was not a waiver of sovereign immunity because it did “not specifically
 4 indicate the State’s willingness to be sued in federal court.” 473 U.S. 234, 241 (1985) (“[I]n order
 5 for a state statute or constitutional provision to constitute a waiver of Eleventh Amendment
 6 immunity, it must specify the State’s intention to subject itself to suit in federal court.”) (emphasis
 7 in original). Here, not only the does the statute not express a specific waiver of immunity to be 8 sued in federal court, the Commonwealth’s intention that state law cases remain in state court is 9 explicit.

11 Fleming is an outlier in federal sovereign immunity jurisprudence that drastically departs
 12 from hundreds of years of precedent. The decision inverted the requirement that a state
 13 unequivocally waive immunity by requiring specific language in the Covenant to show that the 14 Commonwealth did not waive its immunity.<sup>9</sup> Regardless, this Court cannot depart from Fleming.
 15 The Court asserts subject matter jurisdiction over all the claims against Defendants. See 28 U.S.C.
 16 §§ 1332, 1367. Defendants’ motion to dismiss based on sovereign immunity is therefore denied.

18 <sup>9</sup> Fleming’s inversion was no accident. Quoting Justice Wilson’s opinion in Chisholm v. Georgia, Fleming stated that 19 “in an instrument well drawn, as in a poem well composed, silence is sometimes most expressive” for its proposition
 20 that leaving the Eleventh Amendment out of the Covenant represented a waiver of sovereign immunity. 837 F.2d at 21 405 (quoting 2 U.S. (2 Dall.) at 454). Chisholm, of course, is the most infamous case in the Supreme Court’s sovereign
 22 immunity jurisprudence. In that 1793 case, the Supreme Court held that Article III’s grant of federal jurisdiction to 23 controversies “between a State and Citizens of another State” meant—by its plain text—that federal courts had 24 diversity jurisdiction over suits against states by citizens of other states. 2 U.S. at 479. The decision was so massively
 25 unpopular that within days of its second anniversary, Congress had proposed, and three-fourths of the states had 26 ratified, the Eleventh Amendment, which reversed its particular holding. U.S. Const. amend XI (“The Judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by Citizens of another State, or by Citizens or Subjects of any Foreign State.”).

The irony of Fleming relying on Chisholm is not lost on this Court. Nearly two centuries after the American people—through the extraordinary remedy of constitutional amendment—reestablished state sovereign immunity in the face of Justice Wilson’s hypertextualist misconstruction of Article III, Fleming reanimated it for exactly the same forbidden purpose—to eliminate sovereign immunity. See Alden, 527 U.S. at 730 (“To rest on the words of the Amendment alone would be to engage in the type of ahistorical literalism we have rejected in interpreting the scope of the States’ sovereign immunity since the discredited decision in Chisholm.”); Hans, 134 U.S. at 12, 15 (approving Justice Iredell’s historical and experiential approach in his Chisholm dissent).

V. FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM

The Court next addresses the Defendants’ arguments for dismissing the remaining claims. As an initial matter, the Court notes that in her opposition brief and at the October 2, 2014 hearing, Christian voluntarily moved to dismiss Manglona, Claassens, Deleon Guerrero, and Muna from Count 6, Manglona from Count 11, Claassens in his official capacity from Count 12, and Manglona and Claassens from Count 13. (Min. Entry 2, ECF No. 24.) The Court granted the motion at the hearing. (Id.)

Motion to Dismiss Standard

To survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, a complaint must contain “sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to state a claim of relief that is plausible on its face.” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). Courts draw reasonable inferences in a plaintiff’s favor, and a “well-pleaded complaint may proceed even if it appears that recovery is very remote and unlikely,” but “courts are not bound to accept as true a legal conclusion couched as a factual allegation.” Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 555–56 (2007) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted). The purpose of this standard is “to give fair notice and to enable the opposing party to defend itself effectively[,]” and to ensure “that it is not unfair to require the opposing party to be subjected to the expense of discovery and continued litigation.” Starr v. Bacca, 652 F.3d 1202, 1216 (9th Cir. 2011).

a. THE FEDERAL CLAIMS

Count 1: Unreasonable seizure in violation of the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments: 42 U.S.C. § 1983

In Count 1, Christian alleges that Manglona, Claassens, and Does 1–10 violated her Fourth Amendment right against unreasonable seizure when they entered her residence and detained her. (Compl. ¶ 81.) She also alleges a Fourth Amendment violation from Manglona, Claassens, and

1 Does 1–10 for “physically and chemically restraining” her. (Compl. ¶ 82.) Claassens and 2 Manglona argue that the pleadings fail to allege sufficient facts to make out an unreasonable-
3 seizure claim. (Claassens Mot. 5–6; Manglona Mot. 7–10.) In particular, both men argue that 4 “there are other plausible explanations for the facts alleged in the [Complaint].” (Manglona 7.)
5 However, because “other plausible explanations” is not the law, the Court rejects their arguments.

6         The Fourth Amendment secures the “right of the people to be secure in their persons,
7 houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures.” U.S. Const. amend. IV.
8 The seizure of a dangerous mentally ill person, like that of a person accused of a crime, must be 9 supported by probable cause. Maag v. Wessler, 960 F.2d 773, 775 (9th Cir. 1991); see O’Connor
10 v. Donaldson, 422 U.S. 563, 575 (1975) (“A finding of ‘mental illness’ alone cannot justify a
11 State’s locking a person up against his will and keeping him indefinitely in simple custodial 12 confinement.”). In the Commonwealth, a person may not be detained unless “the individual is 13 mentally ill and presents a danger to self or others.” 3 CMC §§ 2504(b), 2501(h) (defining “danger 14 to self or others” as an “imminent and substantial danger to self or other persons evidenced by 15 recent overt acts, attempts or threats . . . includ[ing] attempting to commit suicide or inflict serious 16 bodily harm upon self or others by violent or other actively self-destructive means”).

18         Stripped of legal conclusions, the Complaint alleges that Christian was at home when 19 Manglona and Does 1–10 arrested her on Claassens’ orders. Nothing in the pleadings suggest that 20 Christian was behaving in a manner that presented a danger to herself or others. Similarly, nothing 21 in the Complaint suggests that Claassens, Manglona, or Does 1–10 observed such a danger. The 22 Court can reasonably infer that the Defendants lacked probable cause to arrest her or take her from 23 her home for mental evaluation. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555–56.

24
25         Similarly, nothing in the Complaint suggests that Christian was behaving in a dangerous 26

1 manner at the Rota Health Center. It therefore appears that the Defendants lacked probable cause
2 to physically and chemically restrain her.

3 Claassens and Manglona argue that, pursuant to Iqbal, if a court may infer an “alternative
4 explanation” for the alleged facts that shows a defendant may have acted lawfully, then the plaintiff
5 has failed the pleading standard and the case should be dismissed. (Claassens Mot. 6.) In particular,
6 they argue that the facts suggest probable cause. (Id.) The Court disagrees.

8 Iqbal allows a court to dismiss implausible claims. 556 U.S. at 683. If the facts of a claim 9 support competing explanations for a defendant’s conduct—i.e., that it was lawful under one 10 explanation but not the other—then a court may only dismiss the claim on plausibility grounds if 11 the lawful explanation is so obvious that it renders the unlawful explanation implausible by 12 comparison. Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 682 (explaining that the “obvious alternative explanation” for the 13 disparate effect of post–September 11 law enforcement efforts on Muslims was not “invidious 14 discrimination,” but the likely identity of the Al Qaeda terrorists and their cohorts as Arab 15 Muslims); see Starr, 652 F.3d at 1214 (noting that the Court in Iqbal “concluded that this 16 explanation was so likely to be true that, as between the two explanations, Iqbal’s explanation was 17 not plausible”). Here, unlike Iqbal, there is no reason to think that it is more likely that the 18 Defendants had probable cause than that they did not. The Defendants bear the burden of 19 persuasion that the pleadings are insufficient, and the Court will not relieve them of that burden
20 by creating a presumption that government actors obey the Fourth Amendment, which their 21 erroneous Iqbal interpretation would create. The Defendants will have an opportunity to fill in any 22 gaps they perceive in the pleadings in discovery.

24 Although not specifically alleged in Count 1, the parties also raise the issue of excessive
25 force in violation of the Fourth Amendment. Manglona argues that his use of force in pinning
26

1 Christian's arm behind her back and carrying her down the steps of her home was reasonable, and 2 points out that Christian did not allege that she was injured. (Manglona Mot. 9–10.) Christian
3 argues that, because Manglona lacked probable cause, any force used was excessive. (Opp'n to 4 Manglona Mot. 6.) She also argues that, even if Manglona had probable cause, he used more force
5 than was necessary. (Id.)

6 Christian's first argument—that any exercise of force absent probable cause must be 7 excessive—is not the law. See Beier v. City of Lewiston, 354 F.3d 1058, 1064 (9th Cir. 2004)
8 (“Because the excessive force and false arrest factual inquiries are distinct, establishing a lack of 9 probable cause to make an arrest does not establish an excessive force claim, and vice-versa.”).
10 When an officer lacks probable cause to believe that a mentally ill person poses a danger to herself
11 or others but nevertheless arrests the person, the Fourth Amendment violation is false arrest. Id.
12 Alternatively, for excessive-force claims, courts consider “severity of the crime at issue, whether 13 the suspect poses an immediate threat to the safety of the officers or others, and whether he is 14 actively resisting arrest or attempting to evade arrest by flight.” Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 15 396 (1989); cf. Arpin v. Santa Clara Valley Transp. Agency, 261 F.3d 912, 921–22 (9th Cir. 2001)
16 (“The absence of probable cause does not grant an individual the right to offer resistance.”).

18 With respect to Christian's second argument—that Manglona used more force than was 19 reasonable in the circumstances—the Court finds that the pleadings fail to state a claim of 20 excessive force. Claims of excessive force are analyzed under the Fourth Amendment's
21 reasonableness standard. See Graham, 490 U.S. at 395–96. Here, Manglona “twisted plaintiff's 22 arm up behind her, carried [her] down the stairs, and handcuffed [her].” (Compl. ¶ 25.) He did not 23 strike her or use a weapon, and Christian was not injured. A reasonable officer in the same situation 24 would likely employ the same minimal force. See Graham, 490 U.S. at 396 (“Not every push or 25

1 shove, even if it may later seem unnecessary in the peace of a judge’s chambers . . . violates the 2 Fourth Amendment.” (internal quotation marks and citations omitted)).

3 To the extent that Count 1 raises a claim of excessive force, it is dismissed without 4 prejudice.

5 Count 2: Deprivation of a liberty interest created by CNMI’s Involuntary
 6 Civil Commitment Act in violation of Fourteenth Amendment
 7 due process: 42 U.S.C. § 1983

8 In Count 2, Christian alleges that Manglona, Claassens, and Does 1–10 violated the 9 Commonwealth’s Involuntary Civil Commitment Act, which she argues secures a liberty interest
 10 protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. (Compl. ¶¶ 86–87.) In 11 particular, Christian alleges two omissions in violation of the Act: (1) no one applied for 72-hour
 12 emergency detention under oath or affirmation pursuant to 3 CMC § 2503; and (2) Claassens failed
 13 to assess Christian to determine the “appropriateness of the involuntary detention, consistent with 14 the least restrictive alternative principle” in violation of 3 CMC § 2504(a). (Id. ¶ 86.) Christian 15 was injured by these failures because she had not committed any “acts evidencing danger to self 16 or others within 24 hours of the application for commitment” and detention was not based on 17 “statements of persons with first-hand knowledge” in violation of 3 CMC § 2504(b). (Id.)
 18 Manglona argues that he had no duty to fill out an application to commit Christian, and that even 19 if he did, the provisions of the Involuntary Civil Commitment Act do not create or secure a 20 constitutional right. (Manglona Mot. 11–14.) Claassens argues that the pleadings are insufficient.
 21 (Claassens Mot. 6–9.) Because the liberty interest in freedom from involuntary commitment is 22 already secured by the Fourth Amendment, the Court will dismiss Count 2.
 23

24 The Involuntary Civil Commitment Act establishes a two-step process for admitting an 25 individual for an emergency 72-hour detention. First, if a peace officer or any other person has 26

probable cause to believe that an individual is mentally ill and dangerous, he may take that person for a psychiatric evaluation and file a statement under oath of his reasons for believing that the individual is mentally ill and dangerous. 3 CMC § 2503.<sup>10</sup> Next, a mental health professional or attending physician must examine the individual to determine the appropriateness of involuntary detention “consistent with the least restrictive alternative principle.” 3 CMC § 2504(a).<sup>11</sup> The

(a) Any person may bring another to an evaluation facility and file an application with an evaluation facility for the 72-hour emergency detention of an allegedly mentally ill person. Such facility shall require an application in writing stating the circumstances under which the person’s condition was called to the attention of the applicant. The applicant must stay with the person until assessment is completed and, if applicable, the person is admitted for evaluation.

(b) A peace officer having probable cause to believe that a person is subject to the provisions of this article for 72-hour emergency detention may take into custody and transport the person to the evaluation facility and there file an application for a 72-hour emergency detention (non-court hearing). Only a peace officer may use reasonable force to restrain and detain the allegedly mentally ill person. A peace officer may call a mental health professional, when available, to the scene in order to assist him in making a probable cause determination before transporting the person to an evaluation facility.

(c) The documentation in the application shall include detailed information regarding the factual circumstances and observations constituting probable cause for involuntary psychiatric evaluation and treatment. The application shall be subscribed under oath or affirmation. The application shall be made part of the clinical record.

(d) If the peace officer has stated in the application that the allegedly mentally ill person may be charged with a crime, and, upon assessment, the person is not admitted for 72-hour emergency detention to the evaluation facility, then the mental health professional or attending physician making the assessment shall notify the peace officer, if he is still present, or the police department in other cases that the person is not being admitted.

(e) A mental health professional designated by the director or an attending physician may involuntarily admit the allegedly mentally ill person into an evaluation facility.

(f) Any person intentionally giving a false statement on an application, knowing it to be false, which leads to a commitment shall also be liable in a civil action. The applicant shall be subject to applicable criminal laws.

3 CMC § 2503.

(a) Prior to admitting a person to the evaluation facility for evaluation and treatment pursuant to the 72-hour emergency detention provision of 3 CMC § 2503, the mental health professional or attending physician shall assess the individual in person to determine the appropriateness of the involuntary detention, consistent with the least restrictive alternative principle and commitment criteria of this section.

(b) Detention of a person under this 72-hour provision is appropriate if and only if the individual is mentally ill and presents a danger to self or others. Detention of a person under this 72-hour provision does not apply to persons allegedly gravely disabled. For purposes of this section, the

1 mental health professional may admit the individual for 72-hour emergency detention “if and only 2 if the individual is mentally ill and presents a danger to self or others” and any acts evincing such 3 dangerousness took place “within 24 hours of the application for commitment” and are “based on 4 statements of persons with first-hand knowledge, competent to testify.” 3 CMC § 2504(b).

5 A state law “creates a protected liberty interest by placing substantive limitations on official
 6 discretion.” Olim v. Wakinekona, 461 U.S. 238, 249 (1983). Specifically, a state law must satisfy
 7 two requirements to create such an interest: “First, the law must set forth ‘substantive predicates’
 8 to govern official decision making’ and, second, it must contain ‘explicitly mandatory language,’ 9 i.e., a specific directive to the decisionmaker that mandates a particular outcome if substantive 10 predicates have been met.” Valdez v. Rosenbaum, 302 F.3d 1039, 1044 (9th Cir. 2002) (quoting 11 Kentucky Dep’t of Corr. v. Thompson, 490 U.S. 454, 462–63 (1989)); see Hewitt v. Helms, 12 459 U.S. 460, 471–72 (1983) (focusing on “language of an unmistakably mandatory character”).
 13 “Procedural requirements do not create a liberty interest unless they cause a significant substantive 14 reduction in decision-making or create an imperative that mandates action unless certain clearly-
 15 defined exceptions are found to apply.” Chaney v. Stewart, 156 F.3d 921, 925 (9th Cir. 1998)
 16 (internal citations and quotation marks omitted).
 17

18 However, a state law that secures the same interest as a constitutional provision cannot 19

21 recent acts evidencing danger to self or others must be within 24 hours of the application for 22 commitment and be based on statements of persons with first-hand knowledge, competent to testify.

23 (c) If the evaluation facility admits the person under this section, it may detain him for evaluation
 24 and treatment for a period not to exceed three judicial days; provided, however, that if a person is 25 admitted under this section on a nonjudicial day, detention may only be for 72 hours, so long as the 26 final 24 hours occurs during a judicial day.

(d) If the person does not meet the standards for commitment pursuant to this section and 3 CMC § 2503, the person shall not be admitted involuntarily and shall be offered crisis intervention and referral for other services, as needed.

3 CMC § 2504.

1 create a separate due process interest. Specific constitutional text trumps state-created due process
2 liberty interests. Picray v. Sealock, 138 F.3d 767, 770 (9th Cir. 1998) (“Where an amendment
3 ‘provides an explicit textual source of constitutional protection against a particular sort of 4 government behavior,’ it is that Amendment, not the guarantee of due process, that ‘must be the 5 guide for analyzing’ the complaint.” (quoting Albright v. Oliver, 510 U.S. 266, 273 (1994)
6 (plurality opinion))).

8 Here, the Involuntary Civil Commitment Act’s requirement for a detailed application under 9 oath does not create a constitutionally protected liberty interest, because the presence of such an 10 application is not a necessary condition for a mentally ill person to be admitted. Compare 3 CMC
11 § 2503(a) (an evaluation facility “shall require an application in writing”) and 3 CMC § 2504(d) 12 (a person may not be involuntarily admitted if he does not meet the standards of sections 2503 and 13 2504) with 3 CMC § 2503(e) (a mental health professional may involuntarily admit a mentally ill
14 person) and 3 CMC § 2504(b) (a person may be detained “if and only if [she] is mentally ill and 15 presents a danger to self or others”). In other words, the absence of an application does not mandate
16 that a person go free—it is not a necessary condition for 72-hour emergency detention—and 17 therefore does not give rise to a liberty interest. Valdez, 302 F.3d at 1044–45. Rather, a physician 18 may order an individual to be detained if, after evaluating her, the physician determines that she is 19 “mentally ill and presents a danger to self and others.” 3 CMC § 2504(b). Information evidencing 20 that danger to self or others need not come from the applicant, but may come from anyone with 21 “first-hand knowledge,” including the physician or the allegedly mentally ill person herself. Id.

22
23 Because the only allegation against Manglona—that he did not fill out an application—24 does not rise to a constitutional level, the section 1983 action against him fails to state a claim and 25 must be dismissed. Whether he had probable cause or not, Manglona did not involuntarily commit
26

1 Christian; Claassens did. To the extent that Manglona lacked probable cause to detain and transport
 2 Christian to Claassens in the first place, the interest is secured by the Fourth Amendment, and is 3 adequately pleaded in Count 1. See Picray, 138 F.3d at 770.

4 With respect to Claassens, the pleadings adequately claim that Claassens violated the 5 Involuntary Civil Commitment Act because he lacked probable cause to think that Christian was 6 mentally ill and dangerous. (See Opp'n to Claassens' Mot. 7–8 (“Claassens lacked the necessary
 7 probable cause to direct defendant Manglona to detain and transport Christian in the first place.
 8 Accordingly, Christian has sufficiently alleged facts to support her claim that she was subjected to 9 the Involuntary Commitment Act without due process.”).) However, the Fourth Amendment
 10 already supplies the “process that is due” for involuntary commitment. See Picray, 138 F.3d at 770
 11 (quoting United States v. James Daniel Good Real Property, 510 U.S. 43, 50 (1993)). If Claassens
 12 lacked probable cause to believe that Christian was a danger to herself or others as a result of her
 13 mental illness, then he lacked legal authority to order her seized no matter what the Involuntary
 14 Civil Commitment Act said. See Maag, 960 F.2d at 775. Christian’s interest in being free from 15 civil commitment does not vary from the Fourth Amendment to the Involuntary Civil Commitment
 16 Act, but as a matter of federal law, the Fourth Amendment controls. Picray, 138 F.3d at 770; see
 17 Meyer v. Board of Cnty. Comm’rs, 482 F.3d 1232, 1239 (10th Cir. 2007) (stating that “the seizure 18 of a person for an emergency mental health evaluation is a restriction on the fundamental right of 19 personal liberty and so is governed by the reasonableness requirement of the Fourth Amendment”).

22 Count 2 is dismissed without prejudice. Christian may amend the Complaint if she can 23 show that the Defendants violated a liberty interest created by the Involuntary Civil Commitment 24 Act not already secured by the Fourth Amendment.

25 Count 3: Deprivation of a liberty interest in freedom from physical and 26 chemical restraint created by CNMI’s Involuntary Civil

Commitment Act in violation of Fourteenth Amendment due process: 42 U.S.C. § 1983

In Count 3, Christian alleges that Manglona, Claassens, and Does 1–10 violated her right to be free from physical and chemical restraint pursuant to the Commonwealth Patient’s Rights Act, which she argues secures a liberty interest protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. (Compl. ¶¶ 90–94.) Manglona and Claassens argue that Christian failed to plead facts sufficient to suggest that they plausibly violated the Patient’s Rights Act. (Manglona Mot. 14–16; Claassens Mot. 9–10.) Manglona also asserts that the Patient’s Rights Act does not apply to police officers, but only to hospital staff. (Manglona Mo. 16–17.) The Court finds that the Patient’s Rights Act creates a liberty interest in freedom from physical and chemical restraint protected by due process, and that the pleadings adequately allege facts sufficient to make out a claim against Claassens for drugging Christian, but that the pleadings are too vague to state a claim against Manglona for physical restraint. However, because Christian can likely state a claim by more carefully tailoring her pleadings, the Court will dismiss Count 3 without prejudice as to Manglona and grant Christian leave to amend.

The Patient’s Rights Act establishes a liberty interest in freedom from physical or chemical restraint protected by the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment<sup>12</sup> because it limits official discretion to apply such restraints absent an emergency. See Valdez, 302 F.3d at 1044. As a threshold matter, the Patient’s Rights Act applies to “every person receiving assessment, evaluation, care or treatment at an evaluation or treatment facility, whether voluntarily or involuntarily, inpatient or outpatient.” 3 CMC § 2551. The relevant provision of the Act states that

<sup>12</sup> Of course, an individual also has a substantive due process right to freedom from physical and chemical restraint apart from—but protected by—the Patient’s Rights Act. See Washington v. Harper, 494 U.S. 210, 221–22 (1990) (“We have no doubt that, in addition to the liberty interest created by the [Washington State’s procedural safeguards], respondent possesses a significant liberty interest in avoiding unwanted administration of antipsychotic drugs under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.”).

1 patients have the “right to be free from chemical and physical restraint” unless a “mental health
 2 professional or attending physician” finds that “the patient presents an imminent threat of 3 substantial harm to himself or others and less restrictive means are not feasible.” 3 CMC
 4 § 2558(a).<sup>13</sup> Any such finding must be “contemporaneously document[ed] by written order.” Id.

5 Here, Christian easily makes out a claim against Manglona, Claassens, and Does 1–10 for 6 violating her liberty interest in being free from chemical restraint. Christian alleges that Manglona
 7 and Does 1–10 held her down and Claassens injected her with drugs three times over her protest.
 8 (Compl. ¶¶ 31–37.) The statute requires nothing more. 3 CMC § 2558(a) (“Persons have a right to 9 be free from chemical and physical restraint”).
 10

11 Manglona and Claassens argue that Christian failed to state a claim because she did not 12 plead that the “emergency situations” exception to the law did not apply. (Manglona Mot. 15; 13 Claassens Mot. 10.) The Court disagrees. Ordinarily, the plaintiff bears the burden of persuasion 14 for the essential elements of her claims, but “when such elements can fairly be characterized as 15 affirmative defenses or exemptions,” the burden “may be shifted to defendants.” Schaffer ex rel.
 16

17
 18 <sup>13</sup> The statute provides:

19 (a) Persons have a right to be free from chemical and physical restraint and isolation, except for 20 emergency situations in which a mental health professional or attending physician contemporaneously documents by written order in the patient’s medical records that the patient presents an imminent threat of substantial harm to himself or others and less restrictive means are not feasible.

21 (b) Emergency use of restraints or isolation shall be for no more than two hours, after which time 22 patients may be physically restrained or placed in isolation only on an attending physician’s written order which explains the rationale for such action. The written order may be entered only after the 23 attending physician has personally seen the patient concerned and evaluated whatever episode or situation is said to call for restraint or isolation. Such written order shall be effective for not more than 24 hours.

24 (c) While in restraint or isolation the patient must be seen at least every 15 minutes by qualified 25 ward personnel who will chart the patient’s physical condition and indicate if it is compromised and also chart the patient’s psychiatric condition. The patient must have bathroom privileges at least every hour and must be bathed at least every 24 hours, or before, as needed.

26 3 CMC § 2558.

1 Schaffer v. Weast, 546 U.S. 49, 57 (2005); see United States v. Freter, 31 F.3d 783, 788 (9th Cir.
2 1994) (noting that where a “statutory prohibition is broad and an exception is narrow, it is more
3 probable that the exception is an affirmative defense”). Here, because the right to be free is broad
4 and the exception—requiring an “imminent threat of substantial harm”—is narrow, the Court finds
5 that the burden of pleading an emergency situation should be borne by Defendants as an 6 affirmative defense, and not by Christian as an essential element.

8 Manglona also argues that the Patient’s Rights Act does not apply to him because he was 9 not part of Christian’s assessment, evaluation, care, or treatment, as required by statute. (Manglona
10 Mot. 16–17.) The Court agrees that police officers ordinarily will not be subject to the Patient’s
11 Rights Act, but disagrees with respect to Manglona’s participation in physically and chemically
12 restraining Christian in this case. As Manglona correctly points out, the Patient’s Rights Act 13 applies to persons “receiving assessment, evaluation, care[,] or treatment at an evaluation or 14 treatment facility.” 3 CMC § 2551. Here, Christian was allegedly brought to the Rota Health Center 15 to receive an assessment and any necessary care or treatment, and therefore comes within the 16 protection of the Act. By allegedly restraining Christian after the protections of the Act kicked in,
17 Manglona violated Christian’s rights, and can be held liable. If Manglona had merely transported 18 Christian to the Rota Health Center, and thereafter left her entirely to the care of Claassens and 19 hospital orderlies, he would probably not be the subject of this claim. With respect to chemical 20 restraint, Christian has adequately stated a claim against Manglona.

22 The allegations of physical restraint are far less clear, and must be dismissed. Count 3, like 23 all of Christian’s causes of action, reincorporates every paragraph that came before it, but only 24 describes the factual basis of her claim as the “acts of Manglona, Claassens and Does 1–10 in 25 physically and chemically restraining” her. (Compl. ¶¶ 90, 92.) Christian alleges that she was 26

1 physically restrained at several points during her ordeal—when she was handcuffed and carried
 2 down the stairs of her home by Manglona (Compl. ¶ 25), when she was handcuffed to a stretcher
 3 for transportation (Compl. ¶ 28), when she was handcuffed to a bed at the Rota Health Center
 4 (Compl. ¶ 30), and when she was held down for Claassens to administer shots (Compl. ¶¶ 31–
 5 35)—but does not specify which acts violated the right secured by the Patient’s Rights Act.
 6 Christian’s claims under the Patient’s Rights Act for physical restraint must be dismissed. See 7 Starr, 652 F.3d at 1216 (requiring notice pleading).

9 In summary, Count 3 is only dismissed with regard to claims of physical restraint—the 10 chemical restraint claim survives. If Christian amends the Complaint, she should specify which 11 acts violated Christian’s right to be free of physical restraint under the Patient’s Rights Act.

12 Count 4: Deprivation of a liberty interest in access to a telephone created
 13 by CNMI’s Patient’s Rights Act in violation of Fourteenth
 14 Amendment due process and the First Amendment: 42 U.S.C.
§ 1983

15 In Count 4, Christian alleges that Claassens and Does 1–10 violated her right to have ready
 16 access to a telephone pursuant to the Patient’s Rights Act, which she argues secures a right
 17 protected by the First and Fourteenth Amendments. (Compl. ¶¶ 95–99.) Claassens argues that 18 Christian failed to plead facts sufficient to suggest that he plausibly violated the Patient’s Rights
 19 Act. (Claassens Mot. 10–11.) The Court agrees, but as a threshold matter finds that Count 4 fails
 20 to state a constitutional violation. Because the Court finds that the Patient’s Rights Act does not 21 create a constitutionally protected right, it will dismiss Count 4. However, because the First
 22 Amendment secures a right not to be held completely incommunicado, the Court will grant
 23 Christian leave to amend if in fact she was so held.
 24

25 In relevant part, the Patient’s Rights Act provides that a person has the right to “have ready 26 access to a telephone, both to make and receive calls in privacy.” 3 CMC § 2556(a)(3). There are

1 two exceptions. First, the right to telephone access “may be denied for good cause,” but “only for 2 a specific limited and reasonable period of time by a mental health professional with the 3 concurrence of an attending physician.” 3 CMC § 2556(b) (further requiring that any such denial
4 be “entered into the patient’s treatment record” and the reason be “made available to the patient or 5 his attorney”). Second, “persons committed pursuant to involuntary criminal commitment
6 procedures may have the above rights limited for reasonable security considerations.” 3 CMC 7 § 2256(c).

9 Two Ninth Circuit cases persuade the Court that the Patient’s Rights Act does not create a 10 constitutionally protected liberty interest. In Carlo v. City of Chino, the Ninth Circuit held that a 11 California law allowing an arrested person to make three phone calls within three hours “except 12 where physically impossible” created a protected liberty interest. 105 F.3d 493, 495, 499 (9th Cir.
13 1997). It reasoned that “the statute substantively limits an officer’s discretion because it makes a 14 telephone call mandatory unless physically impossible.” Id. On the other hand, in Valdez v.
15 Rosenbaum, the Ninth Circuit reasoned that an Alaska statute allowing a prisoner “reasonable 16 access to a telephone” did not create a liberty interest because it “merely entitle[d] a prisoner to 17 ‘reasonable access’ to a telephone, and provide[d] prison officials with discretion to determine 18 what is reasonable access under the circumstances.” 302 F.3d at 1045.

20 Here, the statute does not mandate a level of telephone access outside official discretion, 21 and therefore fails to create a liberty interest protected by due process. Although less discretionary 22 than the statute in Valdez, the Patient’s Rights Act nevertheless allows hospital officials to deny a
23 patient access to a telephone for “good cause” for a “reasonable period.” 3 CMC § 3556(b). Absent
24 a greater mandate, the statute cannot create a constitutionally protected liberty interest in patient
25 telephone access. See Thompson, 490 U.S. at 464.

Christian alleges only that she was denied “ready access to a telephone”—not that she was held incommunicado with the outside world. (Compl. ¶¶ 40, 46.) However, the pleadings also allege that Does 1–10 at the psychiatric ward of the Commonwealth Health Center prevented Christian from using her cellphone and computer. (Compl. ¶ 48.) If Christian was not permitted to bring her plight to the attention of others outside CHC’s control, without reason, then her First and Fourteenth Amendment rights were violated even in the absence of the Patient’s Rights Act. Valdez, 302 F.3d at 1048 (finding a First Amendment “right to communicate with persons outside prison walls”); see Carlo, 105 F.3d at 496 (stating that the Fourteenth Amendment provides an arrestee with an independent right to communicate with the outside world).

Because the pleadings only hint at such a violation, the Court will dismiss Count 4. However, Christian may amend Count 4 to plead a direct violation of the First and Fourteenth Amendments if the terms of her confinement warrant.

Count 5: Deprivation of liberty in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment based on a failure to train: 42 U.S.C. § 1983

In Count 5, Christian alleges that Deleon Guerrero and Muna demonstrated a “deliberate indifference to the constitutional rights of residents of Rota and particularly persons with mental illness” by failing to train their employees in the Department of Public Safety (“DPS”) and CHC, and that the failure to train led to a deprivation of Christian’s liberty interests. (Compl. ¶ 101.) Muna and Deleon Guerrero argue that Christian failed to state a claim for three reasons: (1) it is unclear which constitutional rights they allegedly violated; (2) Christian failed to show a pattern of constitutional violations; and (3) it is not clear that the alleged failures to train were the moving force behind any constitutional violation. (CNMI Mot. 12–16.) The Court agrees.

A municipality may be held liable for violating a person’s due process rights by failing to train its employees if: (1) an employee violated the plaintiff’s constitutional rights; (2) the

1 municipality had “customs or policies that amount to deliberate indifference; and (3) that these
2 customs or policies were the moving force behind the employee’s violation of constitutional
3 rights.” Long v. County of Los Angeles, 442 F.3d 1178, 1186 (9th Cir. 2006). The same standard
4 applies to an employer sued in his official capacity. Flores v. County of Los Angeles, 758 F.3d
5 1154, 1158–59 (9th Cir. 2014). However, a supervisor is not vicariously liable under section 1983
6 for his employees’ actions; he is liable only for his own illegal acts. Connick v. Thompson, 131 S.
7 Ct. 1350, 1359 (2011) (“A municipality’s culpability for a deprivation of rights is at its most 8 tenuous where a claim turns on a failure to train.”).

10 Therefore, a court will not ordinarily find “deliberate indifference” unless “city
11 policymakers are on actual or constructive notice that a particular omission in their training 12 program causes city employees to violate citizens’ constitutional rights.” Connick, 131 S. Ct. at 13 1360 (“The city’s ‘policy of inaction’ in light of notice that its program will cause constitutional 14 violations ‘is the functional equivalent of a decision by the city itself to violate the Constitution.’” 15 (quoting City of Canton, Ohio v. Harris, 489 U.S. 378, 395 (1989) (O’Connor, J., concurring in 16 part and dissenting in part))). A plaintiff may succeed in “proving a failure-to-train claim without 17 showing a pattern of constitutional violations where a violation of federal rights may be a highly 18 predictable consequence of a failure to equip law enforcement officers with the specific tools to 19 handle recurring situations,” Long, 442 F.3d at 1186, but such situations will be rare. Connick, 20 131 S. Ct. at 1360–61.

22 With respect to the “moving force” requirement, “the identified deficiency in a city’s 23 training program must be closely related to the ultimate injury.” Canton, 489 U.S. at 391. The 24 relevant question is whether “the injury [would] have been avoided had the employee been trained 25 under a program that was not deficient in the identified respect.” Id.; see Board of County Comm’rs
26

1 v. Brown, 520 U.S. 397, 405 (1997) (“Where a plaintiff claims that the municipality has not directly
2 inflicted an injury, but nonetheless has caused an employee to do so, rigorous standards of 3 culpability and causation must be applied to ensure that the municipality is not held liable solely 4 for the actions of its employee.”).

5 Here, the pleadings fail at each juncture. First, Christian does not allege which 6 constitutional rights Muna’s and Deleon Guerrero’s employees allegedly violated. In her
7 opposition brief, Christian responds to the Defendants’ invitation to identify the rights violated
8 with a fishing expedition: “the acts and constitutional violations resulting from the failure to train
9 are set forth in the complaint” at paragraphs 15–47, 81–82, 86–87, 91–92, 96–97, and 101. (Opp’n
10 15, ECF No. 18.) Christian offers no further clarification. The paragraphs cited include essentially 11 the entire factual background for the case and the substantive provisions of Counts 1–4. Strangely 12 absent are paragraphs 62–71, captioned “failure to train.” Those paragraphs refer to the 13 requirements of the Involuntary Civil Commitment Act and the Patient’s Rights Act, but fail to 14 specify the constitutional rights allegedly violated. (Compl. ¶¶ 65, 70.) Paragraph 101, which 15 supposedly provides the basis for Muna’s and Deleon Guerrero’s liability, simply refers to 16 “constitutional rights.” In sum, Christian needs to specify the rights violated.

17
18 Second, even assuming for the sake of argument that Christian adequately identified a 19 constitutional violation, the pleadings do not show deliberate indifference with respect to Deleon
20 Guerrero. Christian asserts that “Guerrero knew or should have known” that there were defects in 21 DPS training, but provides no facts to back up that legal conclusion, such as prior incidents
22 involving DPS. (Compl. ¶ 65.) Additionally, DPS and Deleon Guerrero were not subject to the 23 settlement agreement, which could have put Deleon Guerrero on notice that his officers required
24 further training. Because the pleadings fail to allege instances showing that Deleon Guerrero had
26

1 notice that his officers were violating constitutional rights, it fails to show that he demonstrated
2 the required deliberate indifference to warrant imposing liability. Connick, 131 S. Ct. at 1360.

3       However, with respect to Muna, the pleadings could satisfy the deliberate indifference
4 requirement. The conduct alleged in the settlement agreement—including CHC’s violations of the 5 Involuntary Civil Commitment Act and the Patient’s Rights Act—put Muna on notice that her 6 employees were violating the law. (Settlement Agreement Recitals A–H.) To the extent that those 7 laws create constitutionally protected interests, Muna’s unwillingness to train her employees could 8 show the necessary deliberate indifference for liability to attach. See Connick, 131 S. Ct. at 1360.

10       Finally, the pleadings fail to adequately allege causation. With respect to Deleon Guerrero, 11 causation is impossible because he had no notice of any prior constitutional violations, and 12 therefore lacked the deliberate indifference necessary for his failure to train to make him liable
13 under section 1983. See Brown, 520 U.S. at 405. For Muna, despite notice from the settlement 14 agreement, causation also appears to be impossible. Claassens, the CHC employee who allegedly 15 violated Christian’s rights, already had knowledge of the requirements the Involuntary Civil 16 Commitment Act and the Patient’s Rights Act, as demonstrated by his signature on the settlement
17 agreement. (Settlement Agreement 7.) Accordingly, if Claassens continued to violate Christian’s
18 rights despite knowing he was not acting in accordance with the law, it is unclear how Muna
19 providing additional training could have prevented the constitutional deprivation. See Canton, 20 489 U.S. at 391 (“Would the injury have been avoided had the employee been trained under a 21 program that was not deficient in the identified respect?”).

22
23       Count 5 is dismissed without prejudice.

24       Count 6: Unlawful discrimination in violation of the Americans with 25       Disabilities Act; 42 U.S.C. § 12132; 42 U.S.C. § 1983
26

1 In Count 6, Christian alleges that the Commonwealth and CHC<sup>14</sup> unlawfully discriminated
 2 against her on the basis of her disability in violation of Title II of the Americans with Disabilities
 3 Act (“ADA”) pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §§ 1983 and 12132, and seeks a declaration that her ADA
 4 rights were violated. (Compl. ¶ 104–8.) The Defendants argue that Christian failed to plead 5 sufficient facts to show that she suffered from a disability, and similarly failed to show that she 6 was discriminated against on the basis of her disability. (Commonwealth Mot. 17–19; Manglona
 7 Mot. 17–18; Claassens Mot. 11–12.) The Court agrees that the pleadings fail to set forth adequate
 8 facts to show discrimination based on disability, and also finds that the remedy sought—
 9 declaratory judgment—provides no relief. However, the Court will grant Christian leave to amend 10 consistent with this order.
 11

12 To prove a claim pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 12132, a plaintiff must show: “(1) he is a 13 ‘qualified individual with a disability’; (2) he was . . . discriminated against by a public entity; and 14 (3) such . . . discrimination was by reason of his disability.” Weinreich v. Los Angeles Metro.
 15 Transp. Auth., 114 F.3d 976, 978 (9th Cir. 1997) (quoting 42 U.S.C. § 12132). A person is 16 considered “disabled”—or “regarded as having . . . an impairment”—if she has been subjected to 17 discrimination “because of an actual or perceived physical or mental impairment.” 42 U.S.C.
 18 § 12102(1)(C) and (3)(A).

20 The pleadings state that Christian “has been diagnosed with a mental illness and is therefore 21 a person with a disability.” (Compl. ¶ 16.) Count 6 complains that the “acts and conduct of all
 22 defendants subjected plaintiff to discrimination by reason of her disability.” (Compl. ¶ 105.)
 23 Presumably, the “acts and conduct” refer to seizing Christian at her home and holding her over the 24

25 <sup>14</sup> Christian originally sued the other Defendants in Count 6, but agreed to dismiss Muna, Deleon Guerrero, Claassens, 26 and Manglona from Count 6 at the October 2, 2014 hearing. (See Min. Entry 2.) Only the Commonwealth and CHC remain.

1 following days at Commonwealth medical facilities, although the Complaint is not clear.

2       Unfortunately, the Court cannot discern how Christian means to invoke the ADA. For 3 instance, the Involuntary Civil Commitment Act explicitly refers to an application for “72-hour
4 emergency detention of an allegedly mentally ill persons.” 3 CMC § 2503(a). As Christian points
5 out, the ADA applies to persons “regarded as having . . . an impairment.” 42 U.S.C. § 12102(1)(C)
6 and (3)(A) (stating that a person is regarded as having an impairment if she is subjected to 7 discrimination “because of an actual or perceived . . . mental impairment whether or not the 8 impairment limits or is perceived to limit a major life activity”). Therefore, it appears that any 9 application of the Involuntary Civil Commitment Act violates the ADA because it only applies to 10 persons perceived to be mentally ill, and therefore covered by the ADA. Such an argument would 11 be unlikely to succeed. Cf. Addington, 441 U.S. at 425–26 (balancing an individual’s right to be 12 free from involuntary civil commitment with a state’s parens patriae powers to provide care to its 13 citizens and its police powers to protect its community from dangerous mentally ill individuals).

15       It is also possible that Christian means that the Defendants intentionally discriminated 16 against her, regardless of their authority under the law. Cf. Duvall v. County of Kitsap, 260 F.3d
17 1124, 1138 (9th Cir. 2001) (stating that a plaintiff may recover monetary damages under Title II 18 of the ADA if she proves “intentional discrimination on the part of the defendant”). Unfortunately,
19 the Court’s review is thwarted by the minimal pleadings. Count 6 incorporates every paragraph 20 proceeding it, but makes no effort to identify any specific discriminatory conduct or provide a
21 rationale behind thinking any conduct was based on a discriminatory motive. Was Christian’s 22 initial seizure and detention a violation of Title II? What about Claassens’ refusal to let her use the 23 telephone? Handcuffing her to a stretcher? Christian does not say. The pleadings do not plausibly
24 support an inference that Christian’s disability was a causal factor in the Defendants’ actions.
25

persons with mental illness. (Settlement Agreement § 2, ¶ 4, Compl. Ex. A, ECF No. 10-1.) However, the terms of the agreement do not apply to Claassens, but rather to the Commonwealth, CHC, and the Rota Health Center. (Settlement Agreement § 2.) Claassens signed the agreement, but made no promises to take any action himself. (Id.) Because Claassens cannot be held liable for breaching promises he did not make, the Court dismisses Claassens from Count 7 with prejudice. The Commonwealth and CHC remain.

Count 8: Unreasonable seizure in violation of Article I, §§ 3 and 5 of the Commonwealth Constitution

In Count 8, Christian alleges that the Commonwealth, CHC, Manglona, Claassens, and Does 1–10 violated her right to freedom from unreasonable seizure pursuant to the Commonwealth Constitution, Article I, sections 3 and 5. (Compl. ¶¶ 113–17.) In particular, Christian alleges that two acts violated her right against unreasonable seizure: (1) Manglona and Does 1–10 removing her from her home, and (2) Manglona, Claassens, and Does 1–10 physically and chemically restraining her at the Rota Health Center. (Id. ¶¶ 114–15.) The Commonwealth argues that Count 8 should be dismissed because it mixes an express constitutional cause of action with an implied constitutional cause of action. (Commonwealth Mot. 12.) Manglona does not dispute that Count 8 states a claim. (Manglona Mot. 1.) Claassens argues that the pleadings provide insufficient facts to plausibly suggest that he violated the law. (Claassens Mot. 14.) The Court finds that Article I, section 3 does not create a cause of action against Commonwealth employees in their individual capacities. Additionally, the Court finds that Article I, section 5 does not provide a separate claim for conduct that would also violate Article I, section 3. However, like the Fourth Amendment claim addressed above, Christian adequately states a cause of action against the official-capacity defendants pursuant to Article I, section 3. The Court will dismiss the claims against Manglona, Claassens, and Does 1–10 in their official capacities, and claims based on Article I, section 5 with

1 prejudice.

2 Article I, section 3 of the Commonwealth Constitution substantially duplicates the Fourth
3 Amendment. See N.M.I. Const. art. I, § 3 (“The right of the people to be secure in their persons, 4 houses, papers and belongings against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated.”).
5 But it also goes further. In pertinent part, Article I, section 3 provides for a cause of action against 6 the Commonwealth if the right is violated. Id. § 3(c) (“A person adversely affected by an illegal
7 search or seizure has a cause of action against the government within limits provided by law.”).

9 By its language, Article I, section 3’s cause of action does not extend to employees of the 10 Commonwealth in their individual capacities, but only against the government itself. See Analysis
11 of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands (“Constitutional
12 Analysis”) 10 (Dec. 6, 1976) (stating that section 3(c) “does not affect any cause of action against 13 officers or employees of the government in their individual capacities”); Rayphand v. Tenorio, 14 2003 MP 12 ¶ 71 (stating that the Constitutional Analysis is “extremely persuasive authority when 15 one is called upon to discern the intent of the framers when the language of the [Commonwealth]
16 Constitution presents an ambiguity.”). Accordingly, the pleadings do not state a cause of action
17 against Manglona, Claassens, or Does 1–10 in their individual capacities, and the Court will 18 dismiss those individual capacity defendants from Count 8.

20 Article I, section 5 secures due process rights, but does not provide a cause of action against 21 the Commonwealth. N.M.I. Const. art. I, § 5 (“No person shall be deprived of life, liberty or 22 property without due process of law.”); see Office of Attorney Gen. v. Honrado, 1996 MP 15 ¶ 15
23 (“the protections of Article I, § 5 of the Commonwealth Constitution are coextensive with the due 24 process clauses of the U.S. Constitution”). When the Commonwealth Supreme Court considers 25 issues raised pursuant to Article I, section 5, it sometimes looks to federal law. See CNMI v.
26

1 Bergonia, 3 N.M.I. 22, 36 (1992) (“We will apply Article I, § 5 using the same analysis as for the 2 Fourteenth Amendment.”).

3 In this case, federal law would evaluate Christian’s seizure under the Fourth Amendment,
4 (the equivalent of Article I, section 3), not the Fifth Amendment, (the equivalent of Article I,
5 section 5). As stated above with regard to Count 2, because Article I, section 3 already secures the 6 right Christian asserts under Article I, section 5, the Court cannot evaluate the claim under the 7 latter due process standard. See Picray, 138 F.3d at 770 (“The constitutionality of [an] arrest may 8 only be challenged under Fourth Amendment standards.”).

9 Accordingly, because Manglona, Claassens, and Does 1–10 cannot be held personally
10 liable under the Commonwealth Constitution as a matter of law, Count 8 is dismissed with 11 prejudice as to the claims against them in their individual capacities. Similarly, the Article I,
12 section 5 claim is dismissed with prejudice. However, because Christian has alleged sufficient 13 facts to show a seizure without probable cause in violation of Article I, section 3, the claims against 14 the official-capacity defendants remain.

15
16 The Article I, § 5 Counts:

17 Count 9: Deprivation of liberty interest created by CNMI’s Involuntary
18 Civil Commitment Act without due process in violation of 19 Article I, § 5 of the Commonwealth Constitution

20 Count 10: Deprivation of liberty interest in freedom from physical and 21 chemical restraint created by CNMI’s Patient’s Rights Act in 22 violation of Article I, § 5 of the Commonwealth Constitution

23 Count 11: Deprivation of right to telephone access as established by 24 CNMI’s Patient’s Rights Act in violation of Article I, §§ 2 & 5
25 of the Commonwealth Constitution

26 Counts 9–11 mirror Counts 2–4, but rather than alleging that Defendants’ violations of the relevant Commonwealth laws create causes of action under federal due process, Christian argues

1 that the violations give rise to Commonwealth due process causes of action. (Compl. ¶¶ 118–22
 2 (Involuntary Civil Commitment Act), ¶¶ 123–27 (Patient’s Rights Act for chemical and physical 3 restraint), ¶¶ 128–32 (Patient’s Rights Act for telephone calls).) Because the allegations essentially
 4 restate the earlier Counts and rely on almost identical constitutional provisions, the Court could
 5 simply apply the same analysis to Counts 9–11 that it did to Counts 2–4, dismissing some counts
 6 and allowing others. (See Claassens Mot. 13–14 (urging just such a response).)<sup>15</sup> However, it does
 7 not appear that the relevant provisions of the Involuntary Civil Commitment Act or the Patient’s
 8 Rights Act could be constitutionalized under Article I, section 5, because the Acts themselves
 9 already provide a statutory cause of action. Accordingly, Counts 9–11 will be dismissed in their 10 entirety. The Court will grant Christian leave to amend directly under the statutory causes of action.
 11

12       It is axiomatic that if a statute provides a cause of action to enforce its provisions, a person
 13 seeking to enforce those provisions may rely on the statutory cause of action when filing suit.
 14 Indeed, a statutory cause of action subsumes any action at law that a person might otherwise press
 15 under an implied constitutional cause of action. See Sablan v. Tenorio, 1996 MP 08 ¶ 26 (stating 16 that 42 U.S.C. § 1983 “provides a substitute remedy which is equally effective to a direct cause of 17 action under the Constitution” and “as a matter of law, Sablan’s § 1983 cause of action subsumes
 18 any action that he might purport to state directly under the Fourteenth Amendment” (citing Thomas
 19 v. Shipka, 818 F.2d 496, 500 (6th Cir. 1987) (“it is unnecessary and needlessly redundant to imply
 20 a cause of action arising directly under the Constitution where Congress has already provided a 21

22
 23 <sup>15</sup> The Commonwealth argues that the Court should reject what it deems an attempt by Christian to imply constitutional 24 torts, referencing Bivens v. Six Unknown Named Agents of Fed. Bureau of Narcotics, 403 U.S. 388 (1971) (creating a 25 direct cause of action for damages under the Fourth Amendment). (Commonwealth Mot. 7–12.) Christian responds 26 that the Court should create Bivens remedies for her. (Opp’n to Commonwealth Mot. 10–13.) Both parties are incorrect. Bivens deals with direct causes of action for damages under the Constitution—not constitutionalized statutory rights. See Bivens, 403 U.S. at 397 (finding a cause of action under the Fourth Amendment). This is not a constitutional tort case, and Bivens does not apply.

1 statutory remedy of equal effectiveness through which the plaintiff could have vindicated her
 2 constitutional rights”))). In other words, it is error to constitutionalize what is already enforceable
 3 by statute.

4 Here, Christian commits just such an error. The Involuntary Civil Commitment Act
 5 contains a cause of action for a patient whose rights were violated. 3 CMC § 2519(b) (“Any 6 aggrieved person may seek to enforce the rights, obligations, and liabilities under this article.”).
 7 So too does the Patient’s Right Act, as Christian asserts in Count 12. See 3 CMC § 2563 (providing 8 that a person “shall have the right to assert grievances arising out of the infringement of the rights
 9 enumerated in this article and the right to have a fair, timely and impartial grievance procedure
 10 provided” and that an “aggrieved person may enforce the rights, obligations and liabilities of this 11 article”).
 12

13 Counts 9–11 are dismissed with prejudice as to the Commonwealth constitutional claims.
 14 If Christian seeks to assert causes of action under the Involuntary Civil Commitment Act and 15 Patient’s Rights Act, she may amend the Complaint and assert an action directly under the 16 authority of the Acts themselves.

17 Count 12: Violation of Patient’s Rights Act for failure to provide a copy
 18 of rights

19 In Count 12, Christian alleges that the Commonwealth, CHC, Claassens in his individual 20 capacity, and Does 1–10 violated her rights under the Patient’s Rights Acts in four ways: (1) by 21 denying her right to be free from chemical and physical restraint; (2) by denying her ready access
 22 to a telephone to make and receive calls in privacy; (3) by failing to provide her with a list of her 23 rights; and (4) by denying her access to her personal possessions while she was detained.<sup>16</sup> (Compl.
 24

25 <sup>16</sup> Claassens is only alleged to have violated the first three provisions; Christian does not claim that Claassens denied
 26 her access to her personal possessions. (Compl. 48.)

¶¶ 133–36.) The Commonwealth and CHC do not object to Count 12 apart from sovereign immunity. (Commonwealth Mot. 23.) Claassens argues that Christian failed to exhaust administrative remedies or provide sufficient facts to make out a claim. (Claassens Mot. 14; Claassens Reply 9–10, ECF No. 20.) The Court disagrees that Christian had any duty to exhaust administrative remedies, and finds that Christian stated a claim for chemical restraint. However, the Court agrees with Claassens about the pleadings’ failure to state a claim for telephone calls or a copy of rights. Accordingly, those claims with respect to Claassens will be dismissed without prejudice.

As an initial matter, the Court acknowledges that in the more than 20 years that the Patient’s Rights Act has been in force, the executive branch has failed to promulgate any grievance procedures pursuant to 3 CMC § 2564. (See Opp’n to Claassens 12.) To the extent that Claassens seeks to shield himself from liability for Christian’s failure to exhaust administrative remedies that do not exist, that argument is frivolous, and is rejected. (Claassens Mot. 14.)

Physical and Chemical Restraint. As stated above for Count 3, the pleadings adequately allege that the Commonwealth and Claassens violated the Patient’s Rights Act by chemically restraining Christian. See 3 CMC § 2558(a). Defendants may raise the emergency exception as an affirmative defense, but it is not Christian’s obligation to plead an absence of emergency.

Telephone Access. The Complaint does not provide sufficient facts to show that the Commonwealth or Claassens violated Christian’s right to a telephone. As the Court stated above for Count 4, the Patient’s Rights Act provides that a patient has the right to “have ready access to a telephone, both to make and receive calls in privacy.” 3 CMC § 2556(a)(3). The Complaint alleges that “Claassens and Does 1–10 denied plaintiff ready access to a telephone.” (Compl. ¶ 40.) That conclusory statement—akin to a blanket claim that Defendants broke the law—cannot 1 support a violation of Christian's right to access a telephone. See Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555–56.

 2 Instead, Christian must provide facts to show that Defendants' actions deprived her of the right.

3       Copy of Rights. The Complaint fails to state a claim for Claassens' alleged failure to 4 provide Christian with a copy of her rights because it does not allege, and the statute does not
 5 create, an affirmative duty requiring Claassens to provide such notice. However, the Complaint
 6 successfully states a claim against the Commonwealth. Christian alleges that Claassens and the 7 Commonwealth are liable under the Patient's Rights Act for failing to provide her with a copy of 8 all the rights she was entitled to during her stay. (Compl. 49.) The Patient's Rights Act requires 9 that "[p]ersons, upon admission, must receive a copy of all the rights they are entitled to during 10 their stay in the evaluation or treatment facility." 3 CMC § 2560. However, the statute does not 11 make any particular person responsible for providing a patient with a copy of his rights, and the 12 pleadings are silent on the question of duty. Accordingly, the Complaint fails to state a claim with 13 respect to Claassens or Does 1–10 because it does not appear that anyone in particular had a duty 14 to act.
 15

16       Accordingly, the provisions of Count 12 alleging that Claassens violated Christian's rights 17 to telephone access and to a copy of her rights are dismissed without prejudice.

18       Count 13: Negligence

19       In Count 13, Christian alleges that the Commonwealth, CHC, Muna, Deleon Guerrero, and 20 Does 1–10 were negligent in failing to train their employees.<sup>17</sup> (Compl. ¶¶ 137–43.) Count 13
 21 reads:
 22

23       137. The plaintiff re-alleges paragraphs 1 through 136 as if fully set forth herein.

24       138. Plaintiff has a legally protected interest in her personal safety, security and 25       bodily well-being.

26       <sup>17</sup> Christian dismissed Manglona and Claassens at the October 2014 hearing.

139. Defendants owed a duty of care to plaintiff not to unreasonably cause physical injury to plaintiff or to enter her premises illegally.

140. Defendants breached their duty of care to plaintiff by failing to train and supervise police officers and health care personnel in the treatment of persons with mental illness.

141. The conduct of defendants fell below the standard of conduct a reasonable person under like circumstances.

142. Defendants' conduct was such that a reasonable person should recognize as involving an unreasonable risk of injury to plaintiff.

143. Defendants' breach of the duty of care they owed plaintiff was the cause of injury to plaintiff.

(Compl. ¶¶ 137–43.) Because Count 13 fails to provide any allegation other than a “formulaic recitation of the elements” of common law negligence, it must be dismissed without prejudice. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

Count 13 is factually underdeveloped. Unlike Christian's other claims, which at least attempt to allege particular conduct giving rise to liability, Count 13 fails to allege any facts to support a negligence claim. It does not identify specific Defendants. It does not identify negligent conduct. It does not describe an injury. It is empty of content, despite having already been amended once.

This Court grants leave to amend freely in the interests of justice, but there are limits. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a)(2). For instance, the interests of justice do not countenance “undue delay, bad faith, dilatory motive, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by previous amendments, [or] undue prejudice to the opposing party.” Moore v. Kayport Package Exp., Inc., 885 F.2d 531, 538 (9th Cir. 1989). Here, counsel for Christian amended Count 13 once already, but did nothing more than allege a failure to train in the amended paragraph 140. (See Initial Compl. ¶ 85, ECF No. 1; Compl. ¶ 140.) Even if the inadequacy of Count 13 was not obvious, the Commonwealth's motion to dismiss the initial complaint identified the same lack of factual content that the Court identifies

1 now. (See Mot. 22, ECF No. 9.)

2 Count 13 is dismissed without prejudice. The Court grants leave to amend, but further 3 failures to provide factual content will not be tolerated.

4 VI. MOTION FOR A MORE DEFINITE STATEMENT

5 The Commonwealth also moves for a more definite statement pursuant to Rule 12(e) of the 6 Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. (Commonwealth Mot. 20–23.) The Court will grant the motion
7 and order Christian to comply with the following instructions for her next set of pleadings.

8 As the Court’s foregoing analysis has made clear, the pleadings are not the model of clarity
9 that they could be. (See Commonwealth Mot. 20–23.) In some cases, that lack of clarity is merely 10 inconvenient (e.g., Count 12), but in others it thwarted the Court’s attempt at review and required
11 dismissal (e.g., Count 6).

12 Before filing the amended pleadings, Christian’s attorneys must ask themselves whether 13 the Court could dismiss any cause of action in the complaint in part rather than in whole (aside 14 from dismissing a particular defendant). If the Court could dismiss part of a count, then it should 15 probably be broken up. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 10(b) (“If doing so would promote clarity, each claim 16 founded upon a separate transaction or occurrence . . . must be stated in a separate count”).

17 For instance, to the extent that Count 1 included both an unreasonable-seizure claim and 18 an excessive-force claim, it was really two causes of action combined. The first part asked whether 19 Defendants had probable cause to seize Christian; the second part asked whether Manglona’s use
20 of force was reasonable. Applying Rule 10(b)’s guiding principle, Christian should have pleaded 21 excessive force as a separate claim. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 10(b).

22 The Commonwealth’s motion for a more definite statement is granted, and Christian is 23 instructed to amend her pleadings in accordance with the Court’s instructions.

VII. CONCLUSION

The chart below provides a summary of what was dismissed and whether the dismissal was with or without prejudice.

Cause of Action	Defendants	Relief Sought	Result
1. Unreasonable seizure in violation of the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments: 42 U.S.C. § 1983	Manglona (both capacities) Claassens (both capacities) Does 1–10 (both capacities)	Damages (Compensatory and Punitive) Declaratory Judgment	Excessive force claim dismissed without prejudice
2. Deprivation of a liberty interest created by CNMI's Involuntary Civil Commitment Act in violation of Fourteenth Amendment due process: 42 U.S.C. § 1983	Manglona (both capacities) Claassens (both capacities) Does 1–10 (both capacities)	Damages (Compensatory and Punitive) Declaratory Judgment	Dismissed without prejudice
3. Deprivation of a liberty interest in freedom from physical and chemical restraint created by CNMI's Patient's Rights Act in violation of Fourteenth Amendment due process: 42 U.S.C. § 1983	Manglona (both capacities) Claassens (both capacities) Does 1–10 (both capacities)	Damages (Compensatory and Punitive) Declaratory Judgment	Physical restraint claim dismissed without prejudice
4. Deprivation of a liberty interest in access to a telephone created by CNMI's Patient's Rights Act in violation of Fourteenth Amendment due process and the First Amendment: 42 U.S.C. § 1983	Claassens (both capacities) Does 1–10 (both capacities)	Damages (Compensatory and Punitive) Declaratory Judgment	Dismissed without prejudice
5. Deprivation of liberty in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment based on a failure to train: 42 U.S.C. § 1983	Esther L. Muna (official capacity) James C. Deleon Guerrero (official capacity)	Injunctive Relief Declaratory Judgment	Dismissed without prejudice
6. Unlawful discrimination in violation of the Americans with Disabilities Act: 42 U.S.C. § 12132: 42 U.S.C. § 1983	Commonwealth CHC Muna (official capacity) Deleon Guererro (official capacity) Manglona (both capacities) Claassens (both capacities)	Declaratory Judgment Damages (Manglona and Claassens only)	Dismissed without prejudice
